Feast of St. Paul & St. Peter

On this feast of Peter and Paul, we remember that we have been delegated to share the vision and loving practice of Jesus Christ. On the Feast of Peter and Paul, we celebrate two men who gave their lives to share the vision, liberation, peace, justice and joy of Jesus Christ.

The message of Jesus is something worth sharing. Peter and Paul were about sharing what they received from Jesus. The church today is also about the sharing of that vision. The church today is about Jesus' vision of being brothers and sisters with and for each other, of being servants of one another, of creating a world of profound justice and peace for all the people. God wants us to make it real today. In today's gospel story Jesus shares "authority" with Peter. In some way this is an example of the delegation of responsibility. It might remind us of the principle of subsidiarity, one of the key themes in Catholic Social Teaching. [A higher level of government -- or organization -- should not perform any function or duty that can be handled more effectively at a lower level by people who are closer to the problem and have a better understanding of the issue.] Jesus delegates authority to Peter and to the whole church. Jesus trusts us human beings to put into practice the good news. No one person knows everything. No one person is called to do everything. God does not dictate solutions "from above." We are called to work collaboratively and consult together as we deal with the issues of our day, as we discern and work together for justice and peace. God cannot create a work of justice and reconciliation unless we get involved. The first two readings affirm the power that comes from God and was manifested in the lives of Peter and Paul. The angel comes to Peter in jail. With this help, even chains cannot hold Peter back. After countless challenges Paul writes: "The Lord stood by me and gave me strength, so that through me the proclamation might be completed." We share in the same spirit that animated the ministry of Peter and Paul. Catholic Social Teaching has been articulated by the successors of Peter and Paul. All of us are commissioned to discern what it means and to put it into practice.
